

THEY'RE

"They're" is a shorter, informal, and completely casual way to say "they are."

This word is typically used in conversation, but not when writing things like professional emails or scholarly papers.

Example: They're going on vacation tomorrow.

THEIR

"Their" is a third-person possessive pronoun.

It is used to portray ownership of a thing or even place.

Example: Their dog is the cutest little thing. Their house is not big enough for another dog.

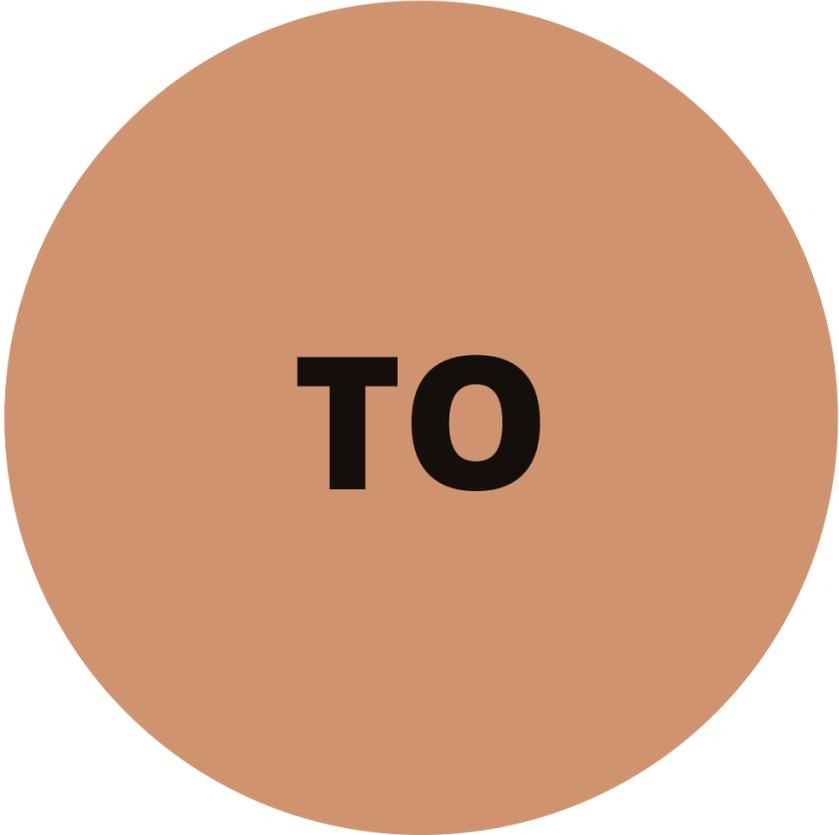

THERE

"There" can be used in two different ways.

As an adverb, it means to be "at that place." Example: He asked me to go there with him.

As a pronoun, it is used to introduce a word or clause. Example: There is something wrong with my car today.

TO

"To" is a preposition that can be used to show location, distance, or motion.

Example: He went to school yesterday. She is ready to go to school tomorrow.

TWO

"Two" is the written out version of the number 2, which follows number one.

Example: I have two sisters and no brothers.

One, Two, Three, Four, Five, Six, Seven, Eight, Nine, Ten.

TOO

"Too" is an adverb that can be synonymous with the words also, more, and very.

Example: I am too tired to focus today. She, too, does not want to go to school.

YOUR

"Your" is a possessive adjective.

It is used to portray ownership of a thing or even a place.

Due to the nature of this word, it is usually followed by a noun.

Example: Your shirt is so cute! Is your mom going to be at home when we get there?

VS.

YOU'RE

"You're" is a shorter, informal, and completely casual way to say "you are."

This word is typically used in conversation, but not when writing things like professional emails or scholarly papers.

Example: You're my best friend. I think that you're great.